

MAYOR MAY NOT SIGN IT

Ordinance Increasing Captain McCarthy's Salary in His Hands.

HAS THREE MORE DAYS

Number of Important Papers Are Approved by His Honor.

Ever since the Board of Aldermen concurred in the ordinance increasing the salary of City Accountant Carlton McCarthy from $1,800 to $2,400 per year there has been considerable gossip and speculation in municipal circles concerning the probable course of Mayor Taylor with reference to the matter.

Yesterday His Honor returned all the ordinances in his hands to City Clerk Ben. T. August, save the one fixing the salary of the city accountant, and now speculation on the subject is even more widespread than before.

The Mayor has until Wednesday in which to dispose of the matter, and the question is being widely asked: "What will he do about it?"

The ordinance went to the Mayor on Friday, and he has five days in which to return it under the law. He may kill it by veto, he may let it die in his hands after the five days' limit, or he may return it without his approval within the five days, and it will become law.

ORDINANCES SIGNED.
Following are some of the important ordinances that have been approved by the Mayor:

To provide for the proper protection to life in buildings of a public or semi-public nature, and to require the board of fire commissioners to make rules regulating the opening and use of said buildings and empowering and authorizing the mayor to close such buildings under certain conditions; also authorizing the mayor to see that the provisions of the law are carried out.

Intending the auditor and treasurer of the city to deliver to the Confederate Memorial Association a bond of the city of Richmond for $50,000—this being the city's contribution towards the Battle Abbey to be erected here.

CANCER HOSPITALS.
Prohibiting the erection or establishment of any hospital in the city for the reception of patients affected with a contagious, cancerous or tuberculous disease without the consent and approval of the board of health.

Fixing the salary of the harbor master at $500 per annum.

Fixing the pay of certain employees of the Gas Works as follows: Lamp repairer, $2.25 per day; blacksmith, $3 per day; foreman pipefitter, $3.50 per day; meter repairer, $3 per day; regular hands employed at Monroe Square and Chimborazo Park, $1.75 per day.

Conferring public power upon the members of the board of fire commissioners, board of police commissioners and the superintendent of the fire alarm and police telegraph department.

Fixing the following salaries: City engineer, $4,500; three assistant city engineers, $1,750 per annum each; clerk in the city engineer's department, $1,500 per annum; bookkeeper and accountant in the city engineer's department, $1,200 per annum; superintendent of the Gas Works, $3,000 per annum; inspector of gas, $1,500 per annum.

NEW BOOKS FOR LIBRARY.

State Library Headquarters Continue to Grow in Popular Favor.

The State Library, under the efficient management of Librarian John P. Kennedy, grows in popular favor daily. The open weather, too, perhaps, has something to do with the increased number of visitors who daily throng the silent reading room.

The following is a list of the books received for the week ending March 18th: Pennsylvania State Records, Schaffer 204, 1902.

Acts of Assembly of Virginia, Extra Session, 1902-03 (five copies).

MR. MARTIN AND THE PRIMARIES

Willing to Submit His Political Fortunes to the Voters and Will Abide Ruling.

Senator Martin's attitude toward the primary election system of Virginia has been widely misrepresented recently. A dispatch from Richmond regarding a speech by State Senator Barksdale, published in the Post and elsewhere, entirely misrepresented Mr. Martin, who has never even discussed the subject of the Machen bill with Mr. Barksdale.

"I have expressed my views on the subject of a primary so often," said Senator Martin yesterday, when asked about the recent reports, "that I hesitate to repeat them again, notwithstanding a manifest disposition in some quarters to misrepresent my position.

"If I had undertaken in person or by letters or telegrams to give shape to any primary election bill or to urge its passage, I would, I have no doubt, have drawn at once the criticisms of the same people who are now complaining of me because the Machen bill did not pass.

"The last Democratic State convention provided a plan for the nomination of all of its candidates, including United States senators, by primary election. The Legislature followed this with a law legalizing primary primaries, so that we now have in force, and legalized by statute, the primary election plan for nominating our candidates. Since the Democratic State convention adopted this primary election plan, I have from time to time, at short intervals, by authorized interviews in the papers of the State, expressed my desire to see the plan have a thorough, just and fair trial, and to see it improved and perfected in the light of experience. So far as my own political fortunes were concerned, I have time and again said that I would as soon submit them to the Democratic voters of the State, under a primary election as under any other plan. Personally, any plan the party may provide will be satisfactory and agreeable to me. Until its recent adjournment, I expected and desired to see our Legislature carefully consider and revise the legislation on the subject, and I regret it was not done. I have never read the Machen bill, am not at all familiar with its provisions, and do not know whether or not it would have been an improvement on the existing law. I know nothing about the causes that led to its defeat.

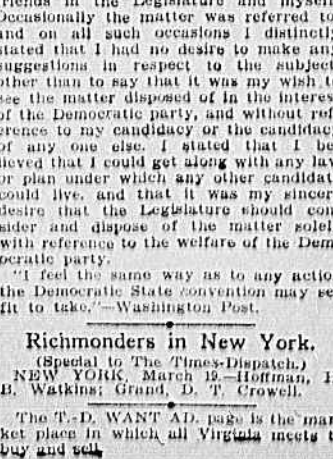

"During the session of the Legislature which has just closed legislation on the subject of the State primary elections was never discussed between any of my friends in the Legislature and myself. Occasionally the matter was referred to, and on all such occasions I distinctly stated that I had no desire to make any suggestions in respect to the subject other than to say that it was my wish to see the matter disposed of in the interest of the Democratic party, and without reference to my candidacy or the candidacy of any one else. I stated that I believed that I could get along with any law or plan under which any other candidate could live, and that it was my sincere desire that the Legislature should consider and dispose of the matter solely with reference to the welfare of the Democratic party.

"I feel the same way as to any action the Democratic State convention may see fit to take."—Washington Post.

WILD MAN OF ROANOKE AND HIS REMARKABLE LIFE

Man of Ordinary Size.

WILD MAN OF ROANOKE AND HIS REMARKABLE LIFE

Man of Ordinary Size.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
SALISBURY, VA., March 19.—Represent to yourself a man of average size, riding a horse somewhat under average size, encountering, just as he was turning his side from closing a gate in a lonely, woodland spot, the steady and inscrutable gaze of a giant whose head towered as high above the rider as his huge hand was near the bridle rein, and you have a picture of my first experience in the presence of Taylor Yopp, Roanoke county's real and only wild man.

"I did not tarry then to measure accurately his height, nor to form conjectures as to his weight, nor to speculate upon possible deeds of his prowess. An ally of ten feet or over would have satisfied the perturbed state of my fancy and for concrete illustrations of his size and strength and of the terror of the very atmosphere of his presence I should have referred shudderingly and instinctively to images stored away in childhood's chamber of horrors, to Goliath of Gath, to Gargantua, or to the form and mien of that fierce Cyclops, who even though blinded by Ulysses nevertheless forced the wily Ithacan and his stalwart companions to resort to the ignominious expedient of blinding themselves to the bellies of sheep in order to escape from the cave of their imprisonment. Immobile and awful stood Taylor, watchful and uncertain as I, when he moved he relieved the situation by simply stepping off on his journey.

YOPP'S PICTURE.
All of this happened many years ago, but the picture of Yopp, which he has just presented to me, and which hangs in the office of the editor of the Post and Dispatch, is almost opposite that of Chief Justice Marshall, recalls the incident as vividly as if the photographer had caught the very scene; for does it not show the very same axe, with possibly some slight difference in the handle, and it is positively known that he catches bathing and utterly rejects all such instrumentalities as soap, washbasins and bath-tubs.

Several years ago, before he countryed with the bridegroom, he was so well pleased with his anatomy that he does now, for he was never known to avoid a stream or the river that gives his name to this beautiful valley. Yopp simply walks off through any stream that he encounters, and he makes it a rule to have been told, to dry himself before the roaring fire of his cabin preparatory to laying himself down for slumber and repose. In this respect only does he temper the rigors of nature; otherwise he takes the weather as the weather man sends it.

FAMOUS WOOD CHOPPER.
Yopp is a famous wood chopper, and four cords of wood is an average day's work for him. He does much of his cutting single-handed, using his great paws alternately, and he can make a clean half cut in a six inch log of wood with two strokes of the axe, a right-hander and a left hander. He has been known to carry fifteen new white oak rails at a load, and can cut and by hand deliver to the mountain roadways one hundred and five saw logs of average size in ten hours.

Our giant's height is six feet eight inches—of course, without socks; he weighs nearly three hundred pounds, and he is a shoeless man. It is only in very cold weather that he encumbers his feet with shoes.

Evidently this great vitality of our hero could not be, and is not, supported on light food. He eats, however, quite sparingly, and in this world all things are relative, and do not pronounce Taylor a glutton when I tell you that he can easily consume at one sitting four pounds of bacon, the same weight of flour or meal, and, besides, he eats butter, ham and coffee in proportion. Unlike Jack Sprat, he eats both fat and lean, and eagerly licks the platter clean. An interesting story is told of an accident that befell him at the age of fourteen. It seems that he was at the home of the late Gideon Turner, on Back Creek, and, attracted by the savory quality of some dish, surreptitiously hunted up the original cooking utensil. He was eagerly enjoying himself, when, alas! his head became fast in the pot. He pulled and squirmed in rage and fury, but to no purpose. The workmen formed a great ring, as if it had been the case of a hooded bull or a bear's head in a bee-gum. Taylor's rage and their fun ran fast and furious, until exhaustion made him doze, and then sympathetically. The utensil had to be broken before he was released, and thus was he "depothetized," as my informant described the scene.

WEDDING MARRIAGE.
This remarkable individual was born about sixty years ago on a spur of the Blue Ridge, in this county. He has been married twice—the first time at the age of twenty-eight, and again last year, his last union with the young Yopp, marriage do confluence, as our French brethren say, and is noteworthy only from the fact that he and his dulcinea were united by a colored preacher, possibly the only case on record of the marriage of a Southerner to a white person by a colored preacher.

It is around his first marriage, however, that the romance of his life is entwined. If it had not been for that happy event Yopp would likely be living now in a cave instead of in a good woman, Mrs. Fannie Hockens by name, having reached the age of sixty-five, and having buried her second husband, was looking out upon the cold world in that romantic and kind-hearted frame of mind that belongs to women who have loved and lost.

"She says Taylor, bare-headed, barefooted and ill-kempt."

YOPP'S HAT.
She piled his sad and lonely condition, and to ameliorate the same made him a present of an abandoned hat of one of her sons, which he still proudly wears, as may be seen from the excellent likeness mentioned above, recently taken by Photographer Thomas G. Maury, of Salem, Va., and highly prized by Policeman Frank G. Webber, by Police-Lieutenant Tom Alft and by this humble scribe. Yes, if one only knew how old the hat was when Mistress Hockens gave it to Taylor, it would be an easy calculation to determine its present age. Suddenly it occurred to me that Yopp, touched by the delicate thoughtfulness of the hale and heart-yearning dame, and one thing led to another, until they were finally married. It was a case of real affection, and furnished a kind of moving picture of a lovely actress and a careless and brimful of bliss, as it is sometimes seen in the rural "deceitries." Adapting an old classic, one might truthfully say that—

"They sat under a tree
And said, 'How strangely fate
And destiny had plucked
In the clouds for the lark;
Then sang by the fireside,
Any starry night, and told
A song without words,
A la Dame Wiggins of Lee."

For thirty years did they walk life's weary road together, scorched by the heat of the sun, and chilled by the cold of a like number of winters, but always as near to nature's heart as the senior member of the family would have Taylor to get. No other child of this family would have been numbered among the nobility in the age of the cave-dwellers, so strong and fierce-looking was the husband, and so demure, self-contained and resourceful was the wife. Mrs. Yopp did much for her husband, and so far surpassed him that they made their home during the latter years of their married life in or near Salem.

SILENT PAIR.
It is certain that their fuses, if they had any, were strictly family ones, and were not displayed before the public gaze, nor told in the markets, which would be another mark of "upper-tendom" in any state, and a grant of nobility to the pair. The engine was not so well known now, as they were to our old residents, and this story is told to preserve in the memory of the younger generation one of the striking characters of the country side in former days. He is still as silent and uncommunicative as formerly, and still answers questions with "Yes" and "No" and "I don't know."
